1 The Shop (TS)

Thomas worked for 30 years as a manager of a factory. Although he was very good at his job he was recently made redundant.

Thomas always wanted to open a shop. He thinks he has the qualities an entrepreneur is likely to need for success. He has undertaken some primary market research to identify possible opportunities in city X where he lives (see Fig. 1.1).

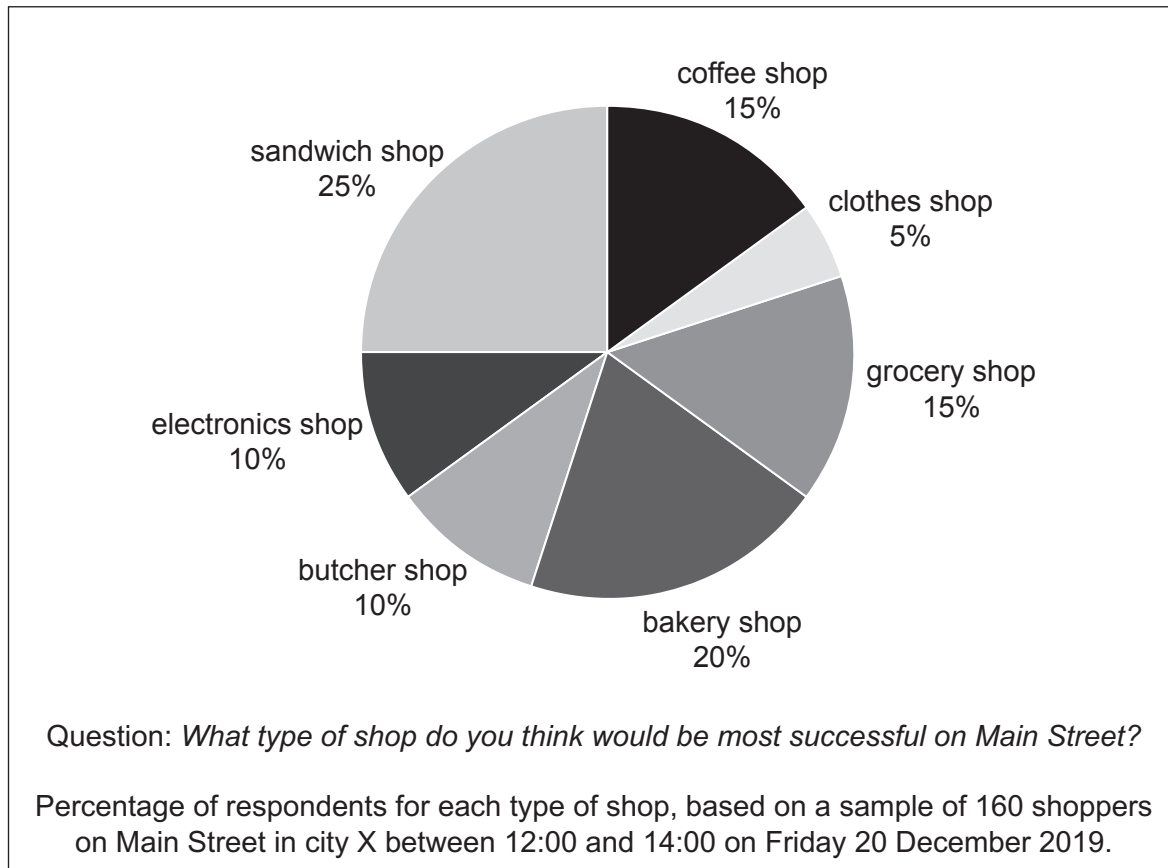

Fig. 1.1: Market research

Thomas now needs to make a decision about which type of shop to open. He has used the data in Fig. 1.1 and some secondary market research to identify two options.

10

Option 1: Coffee shop

The coffee shop would provide hot drinks that customers could take away and drink elsewhere. It would also sell some bakery items, such as biscuits and doughnuts. There are four other shops selling takeaway hot drinks and bakery items in the city, as well as five cafés. Thomas thinks that the profit margin would be 6% to 8%.

Option 2: Sandwich shop

The sandwich shop would make sandwiches using job production. Customers can choose from a range of sandwich fillings, as well as cold drinks and snacks. There is only one competitor in the city. It is a well-known international franchise that spends a lot of money on promotion. Thomas thinks that the profit margin would be 10% to 15%.

2 Market Solution (MS)

MS is a public limited company in the tertiary sector. MS advises businesses on elements of the marketing mix. Most of its customers are small businesses who cannot afford their own marketing department. MS designs marketing materials for these businesses to use.

Although MS uses computer aided design (CAD), the business is labour intensive. MS employs specialist marketing workers as well as administrative support workers. Table 2.1 shows some data about employees of MS.

MS has recently employed Hetti as the new Human Resources Manager. Hetti thinks that the ideas of the motivational theorists are important when managing employees. She is particularly worried about the labour turnover of the administrative support workers.

MS has recently taken on a new customer, named Books Outlet (BO). BO has an objective to increase its revenue by targeting a younger market segment. BO has provided MS with the following information about its current marketing mix (see Table 2.2).
